Figure 1-4. Although a large number of local aquifers and confining units have been identified in the sediments of the Northern Atlantic Coastal Plain, these hydrogeologic units can be grouped into six regional aquifers separated by four confining units. The gray areas represent missing rocks.