

Argumentative Writing Workshop for Science, Social Studies, and English Language Arts Teachers

Tuesday, August 2 to Friday, August 5, 2016 - 8:00 am to 3:30 pm

Byrd Polar and Climate Research Center, The Ohio State University

1090 Carmack Road, Columbus, Ohio 43210 (West Campus)

Are you a Middle School or High School teacher who is interested in...

- learning more about the necessity of argumentation as a skill built across all disciplines?
- enhancing your students' abilities to use evidence to build explanations and support arguments?

Ohio State is offering a summer workshop to train participants on effective ways to teach argumentation in middle and high school classrooms. Rather than being the domain of English language arts teachers, argumentative writing should be a skill built across all disciplines. Teams of teachers from the same building or district are encouraged to apply!

Program costs $85 (includes lunch each day)

Application Deadline: Preference given to those who apply and pay by July 1, 2016

Quotes from Past Participants:

“Honestly, I thought the active workshop was very, very useful. Not only did I learn evidence-warrant claim better, I learned to use primary source documents for inquiry.”

“It was great to see and experience the process of activities done with us that are done with students. I feel like I can make immediate additions to my curriculum due to the way the instructors modeled the technique.”

“Actually taking evidence and incorporating the concept of warrants taught me to help students make specific claims. Overall, I loved my time spent here this week!”
